

History of South African Wines

The early history of South African wine can be traced to the founding of a supply station at the Cape of Good Hope by the Dutch East India Company. Jan van Riebeeck was given the task of managing the station and planting vineyards to produce wine and grapes; that could be used to ward off scurvy for sailors continuing on their voyages along the spice route. In 1685, another Cape Governor, Simon van der Stel, purchased a large 1,850 acre (750 hectare) estate, founding what would later become the world-renowned Constantia wine estate. In the 19th century, South Africa fell under British rule which proved lucrative for the wine industry as South African wine flowed into the British market. This prosperity lasted until the 1860s when the Cobden-Chevalier Treaty signed by the Palmerston government and France reduced the preferential tariffs that benefited South African wine in favour of French wine exports.

Following the devastation from the phylloxera epidemic in the late 19th century, many vineyards were replanted with high yielding grape varieties such as Cinsaut. By the early 1900s there was a large glut of wine, creating a wine lake effect which led some producers to pour their unsalable wine into local rivers and streams. The depressed prices caused by this out-of-balance supply and demand dynamic prompted the South African government to fund the formation of the Koöperatieve Wijnbouwers Vereniging van Zuid-Afrika Bpkt (KWV) in 1918. Initially started as a co-operative, the KWV soon grew in power and prominence, setting policies and prices for the entire South African wine industry. To deal with the wine glut the KWV restricted yields and set minimum prices, encouraging the production of brandy and fortified wines.

For much of the 20th century, the wine industry of South Africa received very little attention on the worldwide stage. Its isolation was further deepened by boycotts of South African products in protest at the country's system of Apartheid. It wasn't until the late 1980s and 1990s when Apartheid was ended and the world's export market opened up that South African wine began to experience a renaissance. With a steep learning curve, many producers in South Africa quickly adopted new viticulture and winemaking technologies. The presence of flying winemakers from abroad brought international influences and focus on well known varieties such as Shiraz, Cabernet Sauvignon and Chardonnay. The reorganization of the powerful KWV co-operative into a private business further sparked innovation and improvement in quality. Vineyard owners had previously relied on KWV's price-fixing structure, which bought their excess grapes for distillation. Now they had to shift their focus to quality wine production in order to compete. In 1990, less than 30% of all the grapes harvested were used for wine aimed at the consumer market, with the remaining 70% being discarded, distilled into brandy or sold as table grapes and juice. By 2003 these proportions had reversed, with more than 70% of the grapes harvested that year reaching the consumer market as wine.

The Cape winelands stretch from the rugged mountains and multi-directional slopes of the coastal region to the open plains of the Little Karoo where viticulture takes place mainly in the river Rhine valleys. South Africa's vineyards are mostly situated in the Western Cape near the coast. Rainfall on the coastal side, where fynbos and rhenosterveld vegetation flourish, measures up to 1 000 mm per year. Travel over the mountains into the hinterland and the rainfall decreases dramatically with the vegetation dominated by hardy succulents, cycads and aloes.

Currently around 101 957 hectares of vines producing wine grapes are under cultivation over an area some 800 km in length. Under the auspices of the Wine of Origin Scheme, production zones in the Cape winelands are divided into officially demarcated regions, districts and wards. There are five main regions – Breede River Valley, Coastal, Little Karoo, Olifants River and Boberg, which encompass 21 diverse districts and some 61 smaller wards.

Some of the most important districts and wards are:

Food & Wine Pairings and Preferences

Wine choice, as with perfume, is ultimately about personal taste; there are no real hard and fast rules, merely suggestions and recommendations. Some wines, such as a good, dry sparkling wine, are extremely versatile and can successfully partner almost any food, and most people find it quite acceptable to drink the same wine throughout a meal. Simple, high quality and lightly spiced dishes showcase the subtlety and complexity of the finest wines better than mouth-searing spices and full-throttle concoctions. Allow the wine to lead the way and not to let the food overwhelm it.

Sea food

Generally, white fish tastes better with white wine, unless a highly charged tomato sauce accompanies the dish. Tuna, Salmon and a few fuller-flavoured fish can pair well with light red wines.

Pork, Beef, Lamb & Game

Most agree that red wines are the preferred accompaniments to these dishes, predominantly due to the fact that the tannins in red wine cut through the fat and muscle of the meat, thereby releasing additional flavours. The body and flavour of most medium to full-bodied reds can match that of meat, sometimes few white wines seem to accomplish. The basic philosophy on meat and red wine gravitates to the old age that the better the meat, the greater the red wine.

Pizza, Pasta, Cheese & Vegetables

More often, direction is taken from the sauce, style or topping of these dishes. There is a growing consensus that cheese is enhanced as much by a white wine as it is by a red, this being particularly relevant to crusted cheeses. Red wines tend to favour soft and semi-soft whole milk cheeses, while goat's cheese can be interesting when paired with either red or white wine.

Fruits & Desserts

With desserts, personal choice certainly reigns supreme, nonetheless generally – Red Wine and Chocolate – with Cabernet Sauvignon, Shiraz and Zinfandel being the most popular choices. Ultimately, experimentation is the key to determine what works for you.
